Lawrence Lansdale just called me and reiterated much of what Derek said in reply to Bradley, but was even more direct. He said the Navy sees no benefit to participating in similar meetings again -- it was a setup with no opportunity for real dialogue and answers. And that the Navy participated in this last meeting primarily because they are trying to be good partners with EPA because we pressed them to do it, despite their better judgement.

I gave him my take on the meeting, including how I feel Derek came across, and that meetings such as this, while possibly moderated better, is part of what comes with working with the community at this site -- as difficult as it may be at times.

I told him we have not had time to regroup yet, but would be doing so Wed, and that we still need to address Daniel Hirsch's issues one way or another. And that we will be getting back with the Navy with our thoughts.
